INTRODUCTION

BOGURODZICA is the oldest surviving Polish religious song. Its first two stanzas, addressed to the Virgin and to Christ, form the original song; later copies add up to twenty more. The only medieval copy with music for both stanzas is a flyleaf of BJ MS 1619, written shortly after 1400. This edition gives that melody in square notation, with the text of the same copy, an apparatus of musical and textual variants, and notes on the manuscript.

Form. Each stanza has three parts: two parallel lines, then a contrasting third with the refrain (Łoś). The melody varies four short phrases (Surzyński's a–d), all traceable to the first line, which turns almost symmetrically on c'–d'–c' (Flotzinger; Perz calls the procedure centonate). The cadence of Maryja returns at zwolena, the second Maryja and Bożyce. Dziewica returns at zyszczy nam, usłysz głosy and a dać raczy. Twego dzieła Krzciciela returns at napętn myśli człowiecze, and the end of a na świecie zbożny pobyt at po żywocie rajski przebyt.

Mode. The final is D, with inner cadences on a and F. Chybiński weighed mode 6 because of the F cadences, but settled on mode 1. B appears once, at the melodic peak on spuści.

Date and origin. Attribution to St Adalbert (d. 997) begins with 15th- and 16th-century copies, Łaski among them, and no modern scholar accepts it. Łoś placed the text in the late 13th century on linguistic and metrical grounds; Chybiński and Feicht put the melody at the turn of the 13th and 14th centuries. Woronczak (1952) matched the opening phrase to the Holy Saturday litany Kyrie in the Graz gradual MS 807 and read the song as a Kyrie trope. Flotzinger (2005) showed that the match covers only the first phrase, placed the Graz manuscript at Passau c. 1170, and rejected the trope reading. He dates the song to the late 14th century, in south-eastern Poland with Czech mediation. Feicht (1962) assembled many parallels, among them Jehan de Braine's Par dessous l'ombre d'un bois, and judged the melody the coherent work of one trained musician. Pikulik (2005) argues that the octave leap after the first Maryja rules out a date before the 12th or 13th century and calls the melody a 13th-century cento. Kalina (1880) heard two melodies by different authors; Feicht's analysis superseded this.

Musical witnesses

- (K) Kraków, Biblioteka Jagiellońska, MS 1619, back flyleaf. Base text. Added to a copy of Latin sermons made by Maciej of Grochów, vicar of Kcynia; before 1408. Stanzas 1–2 with music, in seven systems. Gothic chant notation of German–Messine type, C and F clefs, no custodes. A decorated initial opens each musical section: B(ogu), U (twego), Z(yszczy), T(wego), U(słysz), S(łysz), A (dać).
- (K70) Kraków, Biblioteka Jagiellońska, manuscript of 1570. Leans towards b $\flat$ before cadences on a.
- (W) Warsaw, library of the Literati Chapel at St John's, MS 998 D. Mensural notation, the only witness with written rhythm.
- (CZ) Częstochowa, Jasna Góra, late 15th century. Lost; known from a drawing reproduced by Woronczak. Music for the first two lines of stanza 1 only.
- (GN) The Gniezno cathedral melody, printed in Przyjaciel Ludu 4, no. 46 (Leszno, 1838), p. 364. It sets the whole text, with smaller note values and sharps.
- (Z) Warsaw, Zamoyski Library, MS 1152 (1672). Mensural; the (K70) version, less accurately written.

Readings of (K70) and (W) are given after Chybiński (1907, pp. 30–41), who sets them out in modern notation. (CZ), (GN) and (Z) are described but not collated.

Text witnesses

- ⓌA Warsaw, Biblioteka Narodowa, from Holy Cross, c. 1456. 19 stanzas.
- ⒸZ As above.
- Ⓚ3 Kraków, first half of the 16th century. 23 stanzas.

Pilat (1879) and Kalina (1880) number the Kraków copies the other way round, calling BJ 408 ‘Kraków I’. The sigla here follow the shelfmarks.

EDITORIAL METHOD

Melody and text. The melody and text are those of Ⓚ. The transcription was made from the facsimile and agrees in every pitch with Chybiński’s (1907).

Pitch. Pitch is fixed by the clefs of Ⓚ: final D, range C–d’, mode 1. The single b, on spuś-ci, is natural.

Rhythm. Ⓚ has no rhythmic signs, so the score has none.

Text. The text is normalised after Woronczak (1962), keeping the u that Ⓚ writes and sets to music at the start of line 1.2.

Bar lines. Bar lines mark the verse structure.

NOTES

Staves and clefs. System 1 has four lines, the rest five; the lowest line also serves as the text baseline. In system 2 the clefs move for Matko and return before zwolena. Read with these clefs, Matko is c' a-G-F.

1.1. Bogv rodzicza is two words, with the dative Bogu in a genitive sense (Łoś). All other copies have Boga rodzica, the name used in the 1410 Chronica conflictus ('Chronicle of the battle') and by Długosz. Sławiena and zwolena are Old Polish forms, not Czechisms. The C on -gu- is faint but legible.

1.2. U: two separate puncta, d' c', carry the syllable. The later musical witnesses drop both notes and so lose the octave leap from Maryja. Over -dzi-na of Gospodzina the a and G stand close and the F apart, which gives c' a-G | F.

2.1. dziela means 'for the sake of' (later dla). Łoś knew it in no other Old Polish text and used it to date the song to the 13th century. The printed tradition replaced it with syna; modern popular texts misread it as dziela. Bożyce is the vocative of bożyc, 'son of God'.

2.2. The C on -petn is not visible in the facsimile; only the D over naplen can be read. It is supplied from the parallel 2.1 and from every other transcription.

2.4. The initial of A dać has the same design as the U of Uśysz. This likely explains Pilat's reading O dacz; Łoś, Kalina and Woronczak read A.

2.4–10. From A dać raczy the neumes are larger and more widely spaced, possibly in another hand (Chybiński). The forms and pitches are the same as before.
